I encourage you to read online news and opinion columns in The Guardian/New York Times/Washington Post/The Independent, as well as English short stories, novels and nonfiction whenever you can, and don't be afraid to explore poetry, ancient and modern, when you have a free moment! Words have always had the power to move and shape humanity, and our role as students of literature (I am still learning, like you) is to explore how, why, and to what effect different writers choose to exercise that power. Don't ever forget that the critical study of literature is essential for the conception and construction of a healthy society.
